Hollywood FX for Premiere Pro is a specially designed media/effects plug-in that works with Adobe Premier Pro, allowing users to apply a variety of video transitions and effects to Light emitting diodes (LEDs) are becoming increasingly popular as a lighting source for vehicular signs due to their comparatively high efficiency and long service life. But vehicles typically have at least one metal or metal-like material within the lighting assembly (e.g., near the lens) that may transmit the light from an LED, which negatively affects the color quality and hence the effectiveness of the sign. More specifically, if the LED is sealed by a lens, the lens may often act as an optical barrier to the light, resulting in a higher temperature in the lens (after a long service life) since it cannot conduct away the heat produced by the LED. As such, the lens may become a thermal barrier, which causes the color temperature of the LED to increase, thereby diminishing the perceived color quality of the LED. The DAB-5 channel is a data communication interface used by the Netherlands for digital television. The DAB-5 channel is based on the DVB-T (Digital Video Broadcasting-Terrestrial) standard, which is a commonly used standard for digital television transmissions. DVB-T is also used in the United States and Japan. Link-layer filtering TV-tuners contain two parts: the tuner front-end and the digital audio playback back-end. The front-end receives incoming RF signals, demodulates them and delivers the demodulated data to the back-end. The back-end uses the demodulated data to playout the audio. Both parts contain filtering components for various reasons. First of all, they make use of the characteristics of analogue television to separate the RF band from the audio band in the signal. This would be impossible to do without some kind of filtering. A standard television channel consists
